

Track C: Prevention Science

Rachel Baggaley, WHO

Rachel Baggaley is the HIV prevention and HIV testing coordinator for WHO, based in Geneva, Switzerland. She has more than 30 years of experience working on HIV programmes and policy in all regions and in a range of clinical and community settings. She coordinates the HIV testing work for WHO, including the development of new policy and guidance on HIV self-testing, partner notification and differentiated HIV testing approaches. She leads the biomedical prevention work for WHO, including work on medical male circumcision and PrEP and review of future prevention products. She also focuses on developing comprehensive guidance and integrated HIV, hepatitis and sexual reproductive services for key populations, ways to increase male engagement in HIV and broader health issues, and approaches to improve the coverage, impact and acceptability of HIV and sexual and reproductive health services for adolescent girls and young women in East and southern Africa.
