

Track D: Social, Behavioural and Implementation Science

Martin Holt, Australia

Martin Holt specializes in HIV prevention research with gay and bisexual men. A social scientist by training, he has worked at the Centre for Social Research in Health at the University of New South Wales, Sydney, Australia, since 2003. He is currently focused on the impact of new forms of HIV prevention, particularly pre-exposure prophylaxis and treatment as prevention, and on community norms, attitudes and practices. Martin leads the Gay Community Periodic Surveys, the main part of Australia's behavioural surveillance system for HIV. He also leads a longitudinal study of the social aspects of biomedical HIV prevention for gay and bisexual men (the PrEPARE project), as well as contributing to a range of other projects. Martin is actively involved with the HIV sector, LGBTI community organizations and the Association for the Social Sciences and Humanities in HIV. He has been a Deputy Editor of the Journal of the International AIDS Society since 2013.
